Heading in to summer and as the temperature rises, please don't be tempted to take a dip in open bodies of water 🌊 the dangers are real, with strong under currents, debris, algae and the time the emergency services have to respond. Don't risk it.

Reservoirs are very deep, and the water doesn't flow like it does in rivers or the sea so the temperatures are above an icy cold 12 C. Cold enough to take your breath away. Literally.

If you or a friend is drowning and somebody calls 999 immediately. The time it takes to arrive at the reservoir means it could already be too late. Without specialist equipment, you could put yourself at even more risk trying to help.

Reservoirs and quarry lakes can have strong underwater currents caused by pipes and active pumping machinery that you can't see. The water may look calm from the outside, but under the surface, it can be a very different story.

From weeds and plants that can entangle you, to scrap metal, bottles, cans, and broken glass, you never know what hazards could be waiting below the water's surface.

 Great to dip into @MissChambers_ "girls group". I love this pathway empowering young females with a view to reducing violence against woman/girls. It was great to discuss some points of law on Stalking and Harassment. #persistent #unwantedbehaviour #victim @wy_vru @OAHemsworth
